The components discussed here apply primarily to certificates of achievement; employee, student, or teacher recognition awards; and certificates of participation. Most informal certificates include the following items: Title: Usually, at the top of the certificate, the title is the main headline that usually reflects the type of document. Longer titles might incorporate the name of the organization giving the award or some catchy title such as Johnson Tileworks Employee of the Month Award or Award to the Wise Spelling Bee Certificate of Participation. From: This element presents the name of the person or organization bestowing the award. Beyond the text elements, most informal awards and certificates include a handful of common visual motifs: Border: Not every certificate has a frame or border around it, but it's a common component. Find these online or at your local craft or paper supplier. Honoring a child for their learning abilities? Diplomas and similar official documents of certification may have additional elements related to their legal status. Print on sturdy or glossed paper for a professional effect.Other OptionsIf you are using Microsoft Word to print, you can save time by ordering bulk paper template designs. For example, a school might include their mascot, a club might use a picture of a golf ball for a golf club award, or a picture of a book for a summer reading program participation certificate. Unwrap the text to type on top of the inserted template. It may be as simple as the word Award or Certificate of Achievement. Date: The date when the certificate was earned or presented is usually written out before, within, or after the description. The best award certificates are personalized to reflect exactly why the recipient is receiving the recognition. Include the name of the recipient, description of the award and who is gifting the award. Thanks for letting us know! Tell us why! It may be explicitly stated in the text of the certificate or implied by the signature at the bottom or perhaps by having a company logo on the certificate. Follow this tutorial to print award certificates from your home or office.DesignStart by creating a template of your certificate of achievement. MORE FROM QUESTIONSANSWERED.NET An award certificate for recognizing achievements is a simple piece of paper. Are you thanking employees for hitting a sales goal? Lines: Some certificates may include blank spaces while others will have lines, like a fill-in-the-blank form where the name, description, date, and signature go (to be either typed or handwritten). Presentation Line: This short line of text usually follows the title and may say is awarded to, is hereby presented to or some other variation, followed by the recipient. Make sure you adjust the borders of your document to fit inside the paper template when printing.Download certificates of recognition online. View sample certificate templates online for ideas on designing your own achievement template.The easiest way to print an award certificate from home is to design and save your own template through Microsoft Word. Signature: Most certificates have a space near the bottom where the certificate is signed by a representative of the organization authorizing the award. Follow these steps to create your award certificate template.Open Microsoft Word to a blank new document. Customize information to fit your needs for home, school or office awards. In some cases, the recipient's name is enlarged or made to stand out as much as or even more than the title. Logo: Some organizations may include a logo or some other image related to the organization or subject of the certificate. Decide what level of achievement is being honored and who it is for. Alternately, it may read something like: This certificate is presented on [DATE] by [FROM] to [RECIPIENT]. Make sure to include the date and a line for your signature.PrintProofread your template before printing. Award certificates are a great way to create a simple award for a job well done. Recipient: Simply the name of the person, persons, or group receiving the award. Try printing some tests to make sure the award certificate prints correctly with all design elements intact. It could be a simple statement (such as a high score in a bowling tournament) or a lengthier paragraph outlining specific characteristics or achievements of the award recipient. There is usually a title plus the name of the recipient but there are also a few more components that make up most award certificates. If you don't have a template downloaded, choose from pre-populated Word templates. Determine the function of this certificate, as this plays a large part in design. Typically the date is spelled out as in 31st Day of October or Fifth Day of May 2017. You can use them in the office, at home or in school to express your gratitude. Next, access the tab labeled 'Insert' and click on 'Picture.' Here you can add a template of your choosing into the blank document. This is the perfect time to fix any mistakes and test the design of the certificate. Description: The reason for the certificate is explained here. Sometimes there may be space for two signatories, such as the company president and the recipient's immediate supervisor. The name or title of the signatory may also be included below the signature. Go to the 'Format' tab under 'Picture Tools' and choose to wrap behind text under the 'Wrap Text' field. Open a new document and search templates for "certificate of award." EditEdit all text fields in your award certificate template. Seal: A certificate might have a seal affixed (such as stick-on gold starburst seal) or have an image of a seal printed directly on the certificate. Search for free award certificate templates to get started and print directly from your browser. Flip the orientation to landscape by accessing the 'Page Layout' tab. Locate 'Size and Letter' and then 'Orientation.'
